The China team paid for me. The background: when I started this blog, I had this idea that would help me explore London. While he was certainly true in the early days, lately I did not find myself suffering from TFL Malay. If it is not in EC1 or N1 or WC1 or maybe W1, I don't really want to go. I think of the old days, when I was happily trot to night by night or up to Belsize Park. Not so much more. Become a homebody. So it was nice that the echo pinched me to get on the DLR one Sunday afternoon (on 4 July no less) Å ç and exit at Lotus Crossharbour for some The DLR in a sunny Sunday afternoon is really beautiful. I need water to make me feel healthy and stunned along the driverless train through the canary, and in the crossharbour is definitely a small quiet trip. The menu of the Chinese floating restaurant of Lotus This is an old menu image for the Chinese floating restaurant Lotus and is a bit out of stock. You could find the menumore useful. Arrival in Lotus Crossharbour and at our table. The restaurant is really floating !! They are the only native English speaker in our group today: Echo brought her mother who is visiting from China and her adorable daughter of her Tong-Tong. Three generations. Stupendous. I let you know that I like Taro. And parsnips. PasserÅ² on chicken feet, but sign me for anything with fish. There's a lot of consultation and then start the parade. As always with dim sum, I have no idea what to eat. But it's all pretty amazing. And the light is perfect so every photo you take is beautiful. (Except that point that seems vapor in the middle of each photo, but it was because I needed to clean © my goal.) Good Chinese broccoli. But not enough garlic for my liking. These are my preferred minimum amount. Too in-law. Seeking actually what are called ... CA | Char Sui Buns. I have no idea what they were, but they seemed ordered, all spherical and such. (Almost like that ball lamb, eh?) They were fantastic. I would gladly have had more. Anybody want to tell me what they are? I can not remember what was in them, except that they were fantastic. I'm also a big fan of lotus leaves, packed with rice and God knows what other kinds of delicious substances. These were well made. Tripe, there, that State. Too many times. And unless it is not spicy, not just not for me. (But I give myself points to continuously give a shot of tripe.) Shrimp dumplings. Perfect, really. Taro. This is honestly my absolute favorite. I can not remember the life of me remember what was in them, but they were good. I'm sorry that this is the minimum disclosure of the post ever blog. But Arena ç à ç à, ~à pictures adorable? After the taro, these were my two favorite Å º. I have no idea what they are called. I think they were tormentari? Nobody? Just like tripe, chicken with feet, have been there, done that. Not for me. The service: the service of the Chinese Floating Lotus restaurant is severe. They really wanted that I order in small batches. Everything had to be ordered simultaneously. The atmosphere: Kinda nice in there sitting, looking out on Crossharbour and water. The verdict: I liked Lotus Crossharbour. (Even if you totally could not say we were floating.) I thought all my food was pretty good but I probably need to eat more dim sum to really write anything remotely close to the information here. I'm sorry if you deluderÅ². American in London.
